

Alan Larkins

A biographical sketch of Alan Larkins, nature photographer

Alan got excited taking photos with a borrowed 35 mm film camera when on a five day backpacking trip in Glacier National Park in Montana many years ago. Then that passion was rekindled when his wife, Judy, convinced him to buy one of those classic cameras to capture the smiles of their newborn children as they grew and changed. The children eventually used that camera themselves and are now excellent photographers (and can actually remember what it was like to use film rolls). Alan has had several pictures chosen to be in the 2017 and 2018 editions of the 'Blue Ridge Parkway Calendar' presented by RaysWeather.com and has sold photographs at local exhibits. Mountain scenes and nature close-ups are his favorites since there is an abundance here in this neck of the woods of God's creation.
